2003--Dissertation: Improving the Behavior of Primary School Students with Involvement from Students, Staff, and Families (ERIC, September, 2003)

Applied Dissertation for Nova Southeastern University Ed.D Program in Child and Youth Studies:

This applied dissertation was designed to promote better behavior. Studies demonstrated the importance of eliminating disruptive behaviors in early grades before poor behavior became a pattern, the students became labeled with that reputation, or dynamics were set for misbehavior. Current data showed that uniting schools, students, and families added to positive behavior. Disruption was minimized as schools communicated more effectively with students and families.
